

Islamic website of hate has been up for 6 years

AN extremist British Muslim website preaching terror has been allowed to stay online for SIX YEARS. The site, Islamic Awakening, has over 7,500 members and hails al Qaeda as martyrs while gloating at the death of British troops.

Last night there were calls for ministers to use new anti-terror powers to tear it down.

Posters on the site last week celebrated the killing of troops in Afghanistan. A picture of a vehicle blown apart is headlined "Ten more soldiers sent to the fire".

Another "senior member" used the site to mock troops being brutally beaten.

Vile

Yousef al Khattab wrote: "These pictures just inspire me to jump on top of the soldier and start stabbing him in his neck until I get tired."

Some users even wrote messages to mourn the death of vile al Qaeda leader Mustafa Abdul Yazid—claiming he will be given martyr status and cheering him as a great leader. The group claims to have 7,620 Muslims signed up who have written 349,000 posts.

The Home Office faces questions as to why the message board is still active despite new laws.

Lib Dem Lord Carlile QC, who has investigated counter-terrorism, called for it to be closed.

The site's forum dates back to April 2004. Google identifies it as British-based but there is little information as to who hosts the pages.

HOW I SEE IT: Joe with our James

EXCLUSIVE

BY JAMES DESBOROUGH
US EDITOR

SEething Joe Jackson today sensationally reveals a secret bitter confrontation he had with his weeping wife only hours after their superstar son Michael died.

In a world exclusive interview just 12 days before the first anniversary of the singer's death, Joe tells for the first time how he BLAMED the King of Pop's mum Katherine for FAILING to save him from the prescription drugs that killed him.

The shattering accusation emerged when the couple came face-to-face as Michael lay on a mortuary table.

"Katherine was weeping uncontrollably and highly upset. But I didn't give her a hug because I was MAD at her crying," snaps Joe, 80, who says he had spent months urging her to get the singer into rehab for his prescription drugs addiction.

"I said, 'If you had listened to me Michael would be living now!' I kept thinking about the times I had stood in front of her saying something was wrong. 'I couldn't bottle up my feelings. Katherine didn't say a word—I had to get away from her. If she'd done what I asked, Michael would be here today. I am incensed with her. She could have made a difference.'"

Worrying

But Joe also confesses that HE too failed his son as he opens his heart over the year of anguish the Jackson family have faced since the tragedy.

He tells how Katherine, 80, is still deep in grief while Michael's children Prince, 13, Paris, 12, and eight-year-old Blanket are recovering well from the loss of their father.

And he reveals that Paris and Prince have MET their biological mum Debbie Rowe, 50, for the first time since Jacko's death.

For years Joe—former manager of the Jackson 5—has been painted as the demonic father of Jacko, regularly beating the star during his childhood.

But he still vehemently denies the accusations—and looked shell-shocked as he relived the worrying months leading up to 50-year-old Jacko's fatal heart attack on June 25 last year—brought on by an overdose of sleeping drug Propofol and a cocktail of sleeping pills.

Joe says: "I only saw him a couple of times in his last few months—and he looked weak, thin and like he needed to get some sleep."

"He really never had that glow in his eyes, which he had on stage. I didn't know that he was addicted to drugs, but something was wrong."

"I booked him an appointment to see my doctor, but when I said 'Let's go' he made some story that he had his own

I BLAME WIFE FOR MICHAEL'S DEATH

'If she'd done what I asked, he'd be here today'

CONFRONTATION: Furious Joe told crying Katherine she could have saved their superstar son

doc and they said he was OK. "When I asked him what was up—he said he was fine, but if I pressed him, he'd walk out of the room or disappear. It was very frustrating."

Meanwhile Jacko was growing more and more paranoid. "He kept saying he was going to be killed, and was afraid he would be shot on stage," says Joe. "He always told us, 'They are after my music catalogue', but he never said who he meant."

Joe's worries for his son had only increased after Jackson agreed a £25 million comeback deal with concert promoters AEG in December 2008 for his comeback This Is It shows in London the following summer.

When they increased the number of shows they wanted him to do from 15 to 50, Joe says his distressed son asked him to get his workload reduced because he feared exhaustion.

So Joe met AEG boss Randy Phillips to fight his corner at the Beverly Hills Hotel.

"Michael told me he had signed for just 15 shows, but was doing 50, and it was too much in one go," says Joe. "I warned Randy that Michael would be pushed to the edge. I got angry and started shouting, but Michael and his mother just sat in the corner laughing out loud."

"Just like Katherine, he couldn't cope with confrontations. Randy said he would look into these things, but nothing ever happened."

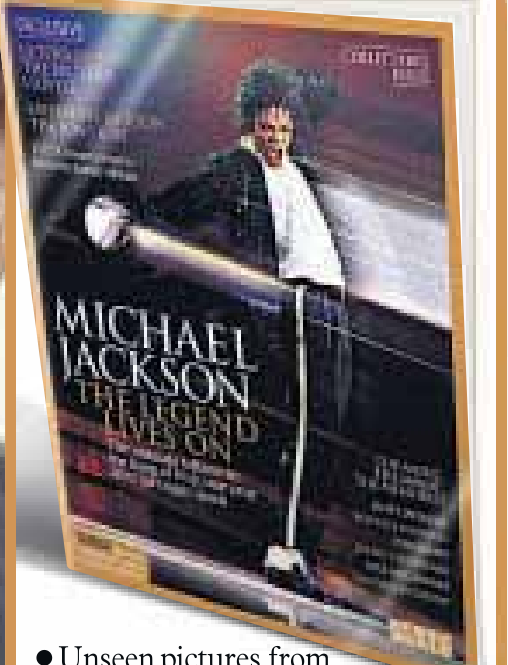

"After that I left the room, and I said goodbye to Michael. I told him I'd speak to him soon—but I never did. It was the last time I saw him."

"I wish I had made him walk away from those shows. I knew he would never make them, but

FREE NEXT WEEK

Michael Jackson 36-page tribute mag

- Unseen pictures from the family's personal album
- Exclusive interview with LaToya
- Secrets of his songs, money and much more

Get your copy only with the NEWS OF THE WORLD

CONFRONTATION: Furious Joe told crying Katherine she could have saved their superstar son

doc and they said he was OK. "When I asked him what was up—he said he was fine, but if I pressed him, he'd walk out of the room or disappear. It was very frustrating."

Meanwhile Jacko was growing more and more paranoid. "He kept saying he was going to be killed, and was afraid he would be shot on stage," says Joe. "He always told us, 'They are after my music catalogue', but he never said who he meant."

Joe's worries for his son had only increased after Jackson agreed a £25 million comeback deal with concert promoters AEG in December 2008 for his comeback This Is It shows in London the following summer.

When they increased the number of shows they wanted him to do from 15 to 50, Joe says his distressed son asked him to get his workload reduced because he feared exhaustion.

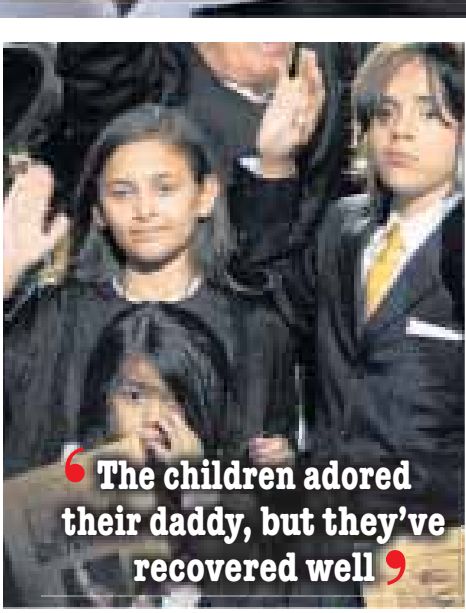

So Joe met AEG boss Randy Phillips to fight his corner at the Beverly Hills Hotel.

"Michael told me he had signed for just 15 shows, but was doing 50, and it was too much in one go," says Joe. "I warned Randy that Michael would be pushed to the edge. I got angry and started shouting, but Michael and his mother just sat in the corner laughing out loud."

"Just like Katherine, he couldn't cope with confrontations. Randy said he would look into these things, but nothing ever happened."

"After that I left the room, and I said goodbye to Michael. I told him I'd speak to him soon—but I never did. It was the last time I saw him."

"I wish I had made him walk away from those shows. I knew he would never make them, but

KIDS HE LOVES: Paris, Prince and Blanket

I never thought he'd die." Just after midday on June 25 last year, Joe took a call at his Las Vegas home as he watched the TV news.

"It was a fan who told me Michael was being carried out of the house on a stretcher. Then it came on the news saying that he had a heart attack," says Joe.

"I knew I needed to get to L.A. But on the way I found out by phone from La Toya he had passed in the car. I felt numb and unreal."

Devastated Joe headed to the Jackson family compound in Encino as other members said their final good-byes to the King Of Pop in the emergency room of the UCLA hospital in

PARANOID: Jackson was afraid he would be shot on stage

Westwood. "I didn't want to see Michael laid out on the slab like that—that was not how I would want to remember him," he says.

"I didn't shed any tears, but maybe I should have. I just felt furious that my son was gone."

And he focused that fury on Katherine. "In Michael's final months alive I said to her many times that I couldn't get through to him—and that she needed to help her son," storms Joe.

"I had begged her to go over and stay with him, but she insisted he needed his privacy and gave him the slack she thought he needed. A child will listen to his mother more than

"Michael made sure they had a strict upbringing, and made sure they studied hard and were only allowed to watch TV at weekends."

"He was a great, but strict father. Now those kids are the smartest and Michael's trained them to be aware of the world and its perils."

He adds: "We have given them more freedom and they seem to love it. They now have TVs and computers. Paris is the leader of them. She is growing up fast and has to be watched closely."

"I am pretty sure she can be anything she wants to be. Like all the Jacksons she has that showbiz gene."

He claims he also blames himself for Michael's death. "I tried to help Michael, but I feel I could have been more aggressive in getting access to him," he says.

"Only once did I shed a tear for him and that was in the Bahamas collecting an award for him. When his songs came on I just choked up and tears ran down my face. I was surprised by that."

"I feel more anger that he is dead. He won't rest in peace until I find out what really happened."

Joe remains unaffected by the public's perception of him as an unemotional, callous tyrant.

Unhappy Michael fired him as his manager, admitting he made him faint with fear and never felt any love.

But Joe says: "I don't know why Michael said those things. If I wasn't strict Michael may have ended up in street gangs as a kid. I put an awful lot of work into getting him developed for show business."

"He knew I loved him. I regret that I didn't say goodbye properly. I want his legacy to live forever."

Now Joe is busy battling for jus-

He reveals that Paris and Prince met their biological mum Debbie Rowe, 50, earlier this year for the first time since Jacko's death.

"Debbie came over with some presents and talked with the kids. They knew that she was their mother, but didn't make a big fuss," he says.

"It was all done in about ten minutes, but it was a good meeting. Whatever has been said, nobody has stopped Debbie from seeing the children. Katherine and she have a good relationship."

James.Desborough@notw.co.uk

Proud

"Prince is quieter, but every time I see him he has a different musical instrument in his hand. Blanket is the most like his dad."

"When I look at him he reminds me of what my son was like at that age. Just like Michael he can dance good too. It's possible they'll go into showbusiness. It would make Michael proud."

Watch Joe's devastating interview at notw.co.uk

He kept saying he was going to be killed

The children adored their daddy, but they've recovered well

WeightWatchers

"I've discovered how to lose weight and keep it off!"

Learn how to control cravings, eat well and feel full.

INTRODUCING NEW HABITS!

REGISTER FREE + FREE MEETING SAVE UP TO £14.50*

BRING THIS COUPON TO YOUR FIRST MEETING For details of your nearest meeting text START and your postcode to 67777 weightwatchers.co.uk

07907 835/836 6010 926/927

*Free Registration and free meeting valid until 28th August 2010 in England, Scotland and Wales only. Savings based on £9 registration fee (concessionary £7.50) plus usual weekly meeting fee of £5.50 (concessionary £4.50). Not available to existing members unless you're a returning paying Gold Member. This voucher cannot be exchanged for cash. Offer not valid if you are buying Monthly Pass as registration is already free. Standard network message charges apply.